It is three stories high, and contains six rooms, and is of sufficient size to accommodate six hundred pupils. It was erected in the year 1855, at a cost of thirteen thousand dollars. On a Saturday afternoon the streets of Wabash present a lively appearance. There are to be seen on every hand evidences of thrill and prosperity. The population is between four and five thousand. CHAPTER LVI.

ELKHART COUNTY HISTORICAL AND DESCRIPTIVE. ELKHART county was organized in 1830, by James Mathews, John Jackson and A. E. Penwell, constituting the board of commissioners. At a meeting of this board, in July of the same year, all the territory in the State east of the present limits of the county was created into a township, and called Mong-go-qua-nong. The territory constituting this extensive township was attached to Elkhart county, for judicial and other purposes, and has since been organized into several counties. In May, 1830, the same commissioners located the county seat in Concord township; but in 1831 this location was changed, and the seat of justice was finally established at Goshen, where it still remains. The county contains over 302,000 acres of land, all suitable for agricultural purposes. The soil is well watered. The St. Joseph river enters the county near the northwest corner of Washington township, and runs southwesterly through Bristol to Elkhart, thence nearly due west to St. Joseph county. The Elkhart river enters the county near the northwest corner of Benton township, and runs nearly west through the village of Benton to Jackson township, thence it pursues a northwesterly course through Waterfo...
