"You love him because this is what you do. Over and over again. You knit yourself right up into these men's lives, these men who will never ever be able to love you back, and then you wonder like a crazy person why you aren't the chosen one at the end. You have to stop doing this..." Some people say that over time, they start to look like their dog. Greer Sheridan is starting to look like her car. When confronted with the reality of being in love with her gay best friend, Greer decides to eat her feelings - all the way across America. In doing so, she sets out on a road trip to rewrite her own recipes for life. Because after all, there are some truths that can only be experienced on the road. And at its winding whim, Greer is taught the most important one: that there is a huge world out there. You can draw the map. You can choose the stops. You can see it all. And in the leaving, you just might actually arrive.
