So You Want To Write A Novel Beth Daniels

So you want to write a novel but have no idea of where to begin? Perhaps this is the place! So You Want To Write A Novel covers choosing the genre, the style of presentation, the word count, building the story and the characters and the stage upon which they play (worldbuilding) then nudges the beginning novelist along through plot construction whether they be of a Plotter frame of mind or prefer to let things grow organically (that is, they are a "fly by the seat of your pants" writer). It briefly covers query letters, synopses, and editing - including cutting words or adding words to the draft. Examples from movies, published novels (the authors and those by other authors, as well) to help clarify things. Daniels is the author of 28 novels in various genres and a former college English composition instructor who moved on to concentrating on online workshops on how to write fiction.
