In the final installment of the war between good and evil there remains one question: who is who? The Devil has exactly 30 years to determine which soul will solidify his triumph over the earth - with one minor stipulation: he must do so as a man and a father.

The Great Red Dragon has agreed to gamble with his existence; and while the advantages of the Devil's victory remain high, the odds teeter between little to none. Stripped of all supernatural ability, the Devil has only the wits and intuition of the man he has agreed to become for a Half a Time.

In the flesh of a mortal, the Great Red Dragon has taken on his new identity as Red: a motion picture mogul and father of triplets housing the souls of Gabriella, Seth and Gareth; however, not necessarily respective to their intended bodies.

Red is challenged with presenting one of his children at the altar to denounce God by the child's 30th birthday. Identifying Gareth is Red's only chance at self-preservation; and as such, he has enlisted Adri, who is enslaved in the body of Madame Fulce to serve as the children's nanny.

With time ticking away quickly, Red is no longer interested in hunting the Woman in the Wilderness. His 30 year gamble revolves around seizing the one child capable of kneeling to the Beast. Who is who? Who will seize control over the Earth? Half a Time will determine the fate of mankind.
