The White Masai by Hofmann, Corinne (2001) Paperback

TARA BROWN: Everybody falls for a good love story but this one is truly extraordinary. On the surface it might seem like a bit of a holiday fantasy, a crush on an exotic Masai warrior she sees across a crowded ferry. But Corinne Hoffman's feelings here in Africa were instant and unshakable. In a moment, nothing and nobody else mattered. Their remarkable relationship has been turned into a feature film. Just as it happened in real life, the film captures the moment love struck. For Corinne, holidaying in Mobassa with her boyfriend, it was the last thing this Swiss woman expected. CORINNE HOFMANN: I didn't think that I go to Kenya and I will fall in love with a black man there from the Masai tribe, no, never, never. TARA BROWN: So you weren't going there looking for love then? CORINNE HOFMANN: No, no. No. I was really in love with my boyfriend. TARA BROWN: Lketinga is a Samburu, the most proud and striking of all the Masai tribes. CORINNE HOFMANN: I just watching this man and think he looked so beautiful and it was something special. I can't tell you. I never felt this feeling before in my life, never. I just knew everything will change in my life. TARA BROWN: Corinne did return to Switzerland with only photos of Lketinga, no address, no phone number. But, despite the comfort of home, her business and her boyfriend, she couldn't forget the warrior. After six months, she sacrificed everything without knowing anything to search for him. You sell up everything, you change your life on an impulse. You don't know what this man thinks or how he feels about you.
