"Poor children are not stupid, there're just poor" is this book's theme as it asks why US public education fails to teach a majority of inner city children to read and write. From the perspective of urban teacher, journalist and political appointee to the California Legislature, the author exposes the details of adult mismanagement and how this management impacts student achievement. In the end, the author exposes how the Los Angeles school system knowingly built schools on contaminated land including the Belmont Learning Center, the most expensive education scandal in US history.
